

Skin Cancer Center

overview

The Froedtert & The Medical College of Wisconsin Skin Cancer Center provides clinical care along with research made possible through the resources of an academic medical center. The Skin Cancer Center delivers comprehensive, multidisciplinary, high quality, evidence-based specialty care to skin cancer patients in a patient-centered environment.

- Individualized treatment options, including Mohs Surgery, are available to treat every facet of skin cancer, from early stage to more advanced skin cancers.
- Specialize in hard-to-treat skin cancers, including: cancers in functionally and cosmetically sensitive areas, rare skin tumors, eyelid cancers, recurrent or previously treated cancers and skin cancers occurring in solid organ transplant patients
- Physicians have a specific focus on skin cancer
- Patient-centered environment means patients see all experts in one facility, with appointments integrated for the patient's convenience and maximum treatment effectiveness
- Our specialists work collaboratively with referring physicians, providing surgery and then returning the patient to his/her own physician for follow up.
- Treatment team incorporates dermatologists (including those with expertise in transplant dermatology), oculoplastic surgeons, plastic and reconstructive surgeons, a surgical oncologist, otolaryngologists, radiation oncologists, medical oncologists and dermatopathologists.
- Multidisciplinary care model - regular tumor board meetings provide multidisciplinary input into management of each patient's case
- Clinical trials available for eligible patients
